The Society for Accessible Travel & Hospitality (SATH) today announced that Dr. Stuart Schulman, executive director of the Center for Economic and Workforce Development at Kingsborough Community College (KCC), in Brooklyn, New York, was the recipient of the “Access to Freedom” award for 2006 - The Steuben Eagle.

In presenting the “Access to Freedom” award, SATH honors and salutes both the unstinting devotion and far-reaching vision of Dr.

Schulman which is best said by Steuben about the statue: “around the world, there is no greater symbol of achievement and accomplishment. This magnificently carved statue stands proudly as a sign of outstanding success.”

The SATH award ceremony was held at the New York Times Travel Show on January 23, 2007, at the Javits Center in New York and at the Hilton Miami Airport in Miami, Florida, on January 10, during SATH’s 11th Annual Congress.

As a recipient of this prestigious award, he is in the illustrious company of President George H. Bush and HRH The Prince of Wales among others.

“I am honored to have been selected as the recipient of this coveted award. I am particularly delighted that SATH chose to recognize the potential of the Center for Economic and Workforce Development at Kingsborough Community College and the promise it holds for workforce development in the five boroughs of New York,” said Dr. Schulman. “My gratitude is boundless.”

The Center for Economic and Workforce Development was established by Dr. Schulman on the campus of KCC in the fall of 2006. It encompasses both economic development and workforce development in a single functional entity. It seeks to match Kingsborough’s program and capabilities with the present and future needs of the community.
