RE: Proposal to delete ENG 6600 from English Department course offerings

The Department of English is proposing that the course Eng 6600: Literature and Psychology be removed from the department's course offerings because it has not been taught in many years and no longer aligns closely with the department's current curricular priorities. As the field of literary studies has evolved, the course's focus has become less relevant to the program, and its removal will help streamline the curriculum and make space for courses that better reflect contemporary approaches in literary and cultural studies.
