The Seminar: Teaching and Documentation
with Jack Mino, Holyoke Community College

Want to encourage students to take responsibility for their reading and learning?

Join us for

The Seminar: Teaching and Documentation

The Seminar is a pedagogical approach through which the process of active learning itself is made visible and audible. In the seminar, the group — not the instructor — is responsible for the exploration of a text and the construction of knowledge. The seminar is an approach that can be used with any course that encourages students to critically read and evaluate texts, and its collaborative nature makes it a signature learning community pedagogy.

WHEN Thur., January 8th, 1-4pm

WHERE Terrace Room, V219

Want to Learn More?

Presented by Jack Mino (MSW, Professor of Psychology, and Learning Communities Coordinator at Holyoke Community College), this workshop will introduce participants to the seminar approach as well as to the process of documenting seminar work as an act of teaching, learning, and research. Professor Mino has successfully used the seminar with community college students at Holyoke, where he has been teaching, learning, and researching learning communities since 1991.

RSVP To reserve a place, please contact KCTL:
kctl@kingsborough.edu | 718.368.5252

Please check out the following links....

for more information on The Seminar: Seminar Primer page;
to see snapshots of student work: School Stories Seminar Series to see a snapshot of a KCC faculty workshop conversation: KCC Faculty Seminar to learn more about digital technology in teaching and learning: Educational Origami to start your own documentation: KEEP Toolkit